New Palestine Growing Like Magic, Says Tourist

By NATHAN T. ZALINSKY

Glowing reports of the almost magic manner in which the homeland of the Jews in Palestine is being made to bloom again as in its heyday in ancient Biblical times were brought to New York city Jews who have provided the funds by Moishe Glikin, just back from Migdal.

More than 300 Jews, many of them prominent in this city, enthusiastically received Mr. Glikin's account of the progress being made at Migdal, delivered at a meeting at 9 Delancey St. last night.

N. T. Zalinsky

The American Jewry may well feel proud of the achievements already made in Palestine through the financial support given from this country, Mr. Glikin declared. Greater, even, than expected have been the results accomplished in Migdal, the ancient city known in Biblical times as Emek Geneser, in the luxuriant valley from which were brought the choicest fruits carried to the temple during celebration of the holy festivals.

"The time will come, and it will be very soon," Mr. Gliken asserted, "when the city of Migdal will bloom as in Biblical times."

"Already there are streets and modern houses with the latest improvements, including electricity and telephone service."

"Where there were undeveloped fields a short time ago, there are now large orange groves, banana plantations and palm trees. It is a place of godly charm and beauty. Tourists come from all parts of the globe to enjoy ideal climate."

Mr. Gliken, who will return to Palestine next month to resume his work there, as the guest meanwhile of Dr. Isaac Miller.
